

To prevent me from communicating on social media, cyber criminals disabled the video camera and audio in my iMac desktop computer. The criminals tracked me from my home in West Oahu to the offices of Cowabunga Computers in East Honolulu who I hired to erase my hard drive and write a fresh copy of the Mac operating system.

In this case, the level of sophistication involved against me is quite evident. To ruin my computer's video and audio systems, my attackers illegally entered the vendor's network, found my activated device by its well known MAC address number, then discreetly hacked the video camera and audio while the software replacement progressed. Illegal entries like this happen each time I take a device to an Apple Store in Hawaii.

The three videos revealing the scrambled view I see when I connect to the onboard video programs in my computer prove my claim is true.

My attackers are so concerned about the truth about them being revealed that as a secondary plan to eliminate my freedom of speech and right to privacy that they block me from connecting to X, TruthSocial, Facebook, and other social media platforms.
